The Daily Press

HONGKONG, DECEMBER 8th, 1873.

ALTHOUGH the proposed Ordinance with reference to trade marks is one which is clearly called for, it is to be feared that, after all, too much must not be expected from it. It is of a technical character, and will have the effect of removing a difficulty which has hitherto been paramount in the way of successfully carrying on prosecutions against those who are found to be fraudulently imitating trade marks; but much difficulty in putting down the parcelling off of spurious articles must still continue. Hitherto, the difficulty has been that the owner of the trade mark being away from the Colony, it has been impossible to prosecute, simply because there has been no one in the Colony entitled to do so, and who could prove a right hereto the exclusive use of the mark. This, it will be recollect, was the point at which a prosecution which attracted some attention with reference to the sale of a spurious oil, as that known as Hubback's, fell through. On the point being raised, the counsel conducting the prosecution felt bound to abandon his case; and although there was no moral doubt that the fraud had been committed, the defendant got off without punishment. This flaw will, at all events be remedied for the future; and in flagrant cases at least the public will be protected from imposition. It is to be feared, however, that the measure will only touch very large and wholesale fraud, such as that in regard to the abominable Hubback's oil, or such as the grand Bass's Beer manufactory, which some time ago was unearthened unexpectedly. Such cases as these it will be possible to put down; but the public will still be subject to a large variety of frauds of the minor description, which it seems out of the power of any legislation to touch. Even at home, the net with reference to the sale of adulterated goods is found to work very defectively, notwithstanding that expensive inspectors are employed, who go daily round to shops to detect spurious articles. The difficulty is, that although they have an outward resemblance to the genuine article, there is some difference which can be shown to exist, and which is pleaded as sufficient to show that the articles were not fraudulently sold; that is, in other words, that the purveyor knew that he was buying an article to some extent adulterated. In fact, it is the well known argument with reference to mulewed shirtings over again. The manufacturers declare that they are committing no fraud, because nobody is simple enough to imagine they are dealing honestly—an argument which is ingenuous if scarcely dignified, or calculated to raise our reputation for commercial morality. In the same way it is possible to make what are practically imitations of a large number of trade marks for liquors, provisions, &c., in such a way that it will become almost an impossibility to prosecute those who do so, but by means of which the public is made to suffer considerably. In regard to such matters, the only remedy would seem to be the same one, which there is a probability will come into force with respect to mulewed shirtings, namely, increased vigilance on the part of purchasers. If care be taken to buy goods in which there is a likelihood of fraud or adulteration only from respectable houses, and even from them only with reasonable care and attention, the chances of parcelling off spurious articles will be reduced to a minimum. Unfortunately, however, in Hongkong, and China generally, evidences of this kind is not one of the most conspicuous virtues; and hence an excellent field is presented for parcelling off rubbish of all kinds, which would command a sale with great difficulty in other places where people are less disposed to be above looking after the little affairs of every-day life—little, it is true, in one respect, but of sufficient importance when, as is often the case, they are the things upon which not only our comfort, but to a great degree our health, must depend.

SECOND DAY.

Saturday, December 6th, 1873.

The second day of the Regatta went off excellently throughout. The weather was somewhat warmer than on Friday, but the sun not so hot as to cause any inconvenience either to spectators or rowers. On board the flag-ship, there was a very good assembly, H.E. the Governor, Lady Kennedy, the Chief Justice and Mrs. Seale, Commodore Parry and others being again, present, and a larger number of ladies gracing the vessel with their presence. A very pretty fleet were some little children dressed in sailor's costume, who attracted a good deal of attention. The arrangements were all excellent, with the exception of the difficulty of seeing as well as might have been wished. Everything went off with good feeling, and the whole proceedings were thoroughly enjoyable. The thanks of the community are due to the Committee and the Secretary, Mr. Starke, for the pains they have taken, and we should be guilty of an omission if we did not also mention Mr. J. S. Knowles, the energetic Secretary of the Recreation Club, whose efforts were unremitting. An additional interest was lent to the proceedings by the prizes being distributed by Miss Lowe, with a few appropriate words. In presenting the Comptador's Cup to Mr. J. S. Knowles, she observed that the name Chile admirably suited the winning boat in the Comptador's Cup; and in handing the prizes in the Chairman's Cup and the German Cup to Mr. Knowles, who was excommunicant, and appeared on behalf of Mr. Woodin, who was unable to attend at the moment, she said she had great pleasure in presenting the two cups which had been won by Mr. Woodin and his indefatigable crew. It is hardly worth the trouble to add that the crew were not large enough to hold all the cups he had won, but had well shown that they did not lack the strength to win them. Miss Kennedy, Lady Kennedy, and the Governor, were most cordially received by the recipients of the awards, and the whole Regatta was again in attendance. The results of the competition were as follows:—
